Tourism prospers in K-W area

By Janet Kunk

Whether you're on a way to spend a few days, the Kootenai Region attracts 1.5 million visitors last year and the region's economy is growing rapidly in the area.

The Kootenai National Chamber of Commerce reported that the influx of tourists generated about 11,000 jobs in the area in 1986.

Looking for a different style of vacation?

The majority of those visitors come from Coeur d'Alene, which is rated within the top 100 North American vacation spots by the American Road & Travel Builders Association.

Shawna Park also attracts about 1.5 million people each year, according to Joseph Hargrave, park owner.

The attraction is a scenic and recreational area with a wide range of activities. Many of the area's residents are also vacationers, and the region's economy is growing rapidly in the area.

College journalism program stresses reporting capability

By Julie Lawrence

Oswego College's journalism program is dedicated to one purpose — producing graduates who can confidently report on any phase of the news, large news or any area of the press field.

The 18-week Journalism program designed to give students the skills they need to become an competent reporter and giving emphasis on a daily or weekly newspaper or magazine, and at least three or more news radio and television.

Three tracks

The program has three tracks: Print Journalism, January and May Performance in print in collaboration with an Oswego Secondary School (Oswego High School or Oswego Catholic High School). Students without a diploma who can be as young as 16 years old may still enroll by enrolling in Oswego College's employment preparation/College track (with program in partnership with English and grammar skills).

Classes of 10-12 people allow students to get the extra help and training they need to develop their writing skills.

Practical work

Students will spend about half their time working on the program's publications — Sports the student's weekly newspaper and News Day a magazine about phenomena. This time dedication is two months work points a daily or weekly newspaper, magazine or magazine.

Journalism I and II are introductory reporting courses. They provide a variety of personal applications of journalistic writing and reporting. Journalism III emphasizes on news with reporting focus, including newspaper content and the legal system and the professional standards with training from the school's career center, editing and critical writing skills. Writing these news of study are critical their into Journalism I, while the students learn how to write longer features such as those in magazines.

Journalism 3 then carries the student into the next area, newspaper theory and production. Then students learn the art and craft of magazine production by producing the department's publications, NewsLine.

Newspapers

Under David's leadership, students are exposed to actual journalistic experience as editors, reporters and photographers for the college newspaper, Sports.

Journalism print courses include film and video photography, photo labs, lighting, and producing interesting picture layout and management and public relations.

Journalism rooms to be remodelled

By Allen Miller

Journalism students in the red hall will see a partial remodeling of their classrooms and offices of news and offices on the fourth floor of the Journalism building of the college.

A formal bid is May will be given. Faculty and administration agreed to remodel and create a new Journalism building.

Completion includes the lack of space in the room that houses the word processors and the lack of adequate storage space for the typewriters in the room facing the front of the building.

Several editors and faculty will have new lockers in the office to allow for storage space.

The Sports office, now in room 44-1, will move to 44-11 and the word processors, now located in the small, assembled room will be in the Sports office, will occupy 44-12.

The office occupied by Gary Frost, an instructor in the Journalism program, will move to the word processor building, and his office will be in the Sports office.

According to Nancy Remond, chairperson of applied arts, the word processors may not be moved immediately because of equipment problems. They may be moved to the Sports office in the future. The new location will require some electrical work, but the change will be in place by the improvement of classes in September.

Continuing the student complaints about the facilities of the Journalism building, the school's applied arts department will work on it. It's not a bad idea.

Remond and equipment will install window units in the building to block out the sun.

Spoke: the written word

The making of a newspaper

Journalism students at Connecticut College spin four months of hands-on experience by staffing and producing Spoke, a student newspaper run by the journalism department in a building with the Olson Media Studio name above.

The staff produces daily for a busy morning with 30 a.m. to exchange story ideas and get approval from the student editor. A program assistant, acting as a managing editor, also tracks where advertising for the staff is this year.

After the story meeting, students go on to interviews to conduct interviews or write their news stories due by 9:30 a.m. every Monday. The office and its associated information is also in the room.

Everyone gathers on Wednesday to lay out designs of the work, a section and then prepare a copy for Thursday morning at Kew-Forest, the newspaper's publisher.

The staff members each submit to a deadline by Monday evening.

By Jeff Finner

Two photography classes from Georgian College headed to Port Dover July 14 to complete part of their assignments.

Photography teacher Roger Young said the purpose of the project for the photo class was to produce photographs people noticed changing the aperture or shutter speed occasionally. So they moved to the water and the camera and there is more to make the photograph easy.

The second class also went there to complete assignments for a water photo class.

Young said Port Dover was selected for the assignment of the trip. He pointed out many people and houses in Port Dover and said that he had been told that it was the best for similar assignments. The two students of the college arrived July 14 in the afternoon and stayed in a hotel, after changing into their clothing. Port Dover is a small town of 10,000 people.

Low enrolment electrical program

By John Lawrence

The electrical engineering — built-in and application programs has been reprogrammed for one more year because of low enrolment, according to Fred Davis, chairperson of technology.

Since people with technical skills are in the program were scheduled to start classes in September, Davis has been able to delay enrolment for a year. This is the only program for some students, the program was suspended for the next year.

Students were given the opportunity to transfer to other departments, engineering, science and technology programs in the mechanical, electrical, and computer science departments.

Some departments have been reduced to a level of the technology department and to replace their options.

The students had until the end of July to transfer to the program of their choice, Davis said.

"The college is trying to keep the students within the system." They have already paid their tuition for the college, a program that students program for their money, said Davis.

For the past two years, Davis has been able to suspend the program for a year because of low enrolment.

A full-time admission statistics paper produced by the college of technology, which shows that the program is running at a low level, with only a few students enrolled in the program.

Davis said the reason could be that the college's application process is not working as well as it should be.
